100-foot-high piles of filthy snow won't melt until July

Vile. The wrath of one of the worst winters in Mass. history lingers in disgusting piles that will last into July.

You would think a snow farm from February wouldn't have a snowman's chance in hell of hanging around until July.

But if you venture down to Tide Street in the Seaport or get off I-90 at the Allston/Brighton exit, you'll see the remainders of the most historic snowfall in Massachusetts since 1827.

They are vile mounds of filth decorated with city grime and household garbage. The wrath of February's blizzards often arrived on Sunday nights and with Monday being trash and recycling pickup days for many neighborhoods, much of the garbage was buried in several feet of snow each week.

"Right now, we've disposed of about 130 tons of trash and debris," Department of Public Works employee Danny Nee said. "Nothing about what is down [at the Seaport farm] is normal or has been done before. Usually we get some garbage when we plow, but the size and scope of this year was impossible to predict."

There were at least eight massive piles of blizzard bounty, most of them around 100 feet high and as wide as every vacant lot that housed them.

As we approach mid-June, the remnants are holding strong, and you can expect them to stay put past the

Quoted

"If you were going to tell me we'd be dealing with snow farms in mid-June into July? Give me a break. I'd say that's impossible." Danny Nee

Fourth of July.

"First off, if you were going to tell me we were going to get 10 feet of snow in 25 days, I'd have said you were nuts," Nee said. "Then if you were going to tell me we'd be dealing with snow farms in mid-June into July? Give me a break. I'd say that's impossible."

The DPW was reluctant to dump the snow piles into the ocean, even though they got the green light to do so after the second storm.

So instead, crews worked 24/7 to pile snow on top of piles in order to clear precious space for, you guessed it, more snow.

Each storm had DPW workers certain that they were maxed out and had no more space for more snow. After each storm, they surprised themselves by making more room.

"We were able to keep 98 percent of the streets open, even if it was a hassle for people to get around," Nee said. "I don't think I paid for a cup of coffee all winter. People were great. They understood that this was a huge undertaking and we were figuring it out as we went along."

The foul pile in the Seaport has shrunk by about 25 percent in the last two weeks, but the warmer weather doesn't facilitate the melting process the way one might guess.

"Hot days don't do too much," Nee said. "The sun is absorbed into the grime, but that only solidifies the core of the pile." Nee said rain is the key to melting the pile down if the evenings keep cooling off. The piles make their own little ecosystems, where the runoff refreezes on the asphalt, which acts as the farm's refrigerator.

The site of the snow farm in the Seaport sits in the lot that housed circus group Cirque du Soleil last year.

Labor. Logan airport workers strike

About 100 Logan airport workers went on a 24-hour strike Wednesday to bring attention to labor practices they say are unfair.

Airport union workers, represented by 32BJ SEIU, say the strike stems from frustration with their employers — including ReadyJet Inc. and G2 Secure, which provide services to JetBlue, US Airways and Delta — employing nonunion labor.

"The workers are stepping it up today and saying enough is enough," Roxanne Rivera, vice president of 32BJ SEIU, told the News Service Wednesday, noting some workers began striking Tuesday night.

"We feel that the airport needs to be a place where workers can really speak up about their working conditions without their employers breaking the law."

According to the union, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration is investigating "whether ReadyJet illegally terminated workers for exercising their protected rights." The union said the company fired more than one-third of its workforce over the last year and a half.

Several lawmakers joined the strikers at a rally outside the State House. SHNS

Olympics. Quincy would host volleyball stadium

The walkability of the 2024 Olympic Games was put into further doubt Wednesday after officials announced that volleyball events would be held at a former airbase in Quincy, yet another venue featured in the revised plans that's outside of Boston's center.

On Wednesday morning, Quincy Mayor Tom Koch and Boston 2024 CEO Rich Davey announced that Squantum Point Park, a former airbase under the landing route of planes headed to Logan, next to a rusted and depleted seawall, would house a 20,000-seat stadium for the volleyball events.

Squantum Point Park is not easily accessible, and would completely depend on ferries, trains and shuttles to bring the crowds to the events and back.

The spread of Olympic events in the city's revised bid appears at odds with Boston's original pitch to be the most walkable Games ever.

Relocated

The original bid to the IOC promised to deliver "the most walkable Games in modern times." The committee initially set their crosshairs on Long Island, the former site of a homeless shelter, for the skeet and trap shooting events and had Boston Harbor hosting the sailing events.

- Those events have since been relocated outside to Billerica and New Bedford, respectively. Initially, the beach volleyball events were slated for the Boston Common.

"Transit is directly connected to people's ability to walk to the Games," Walk-Boston Communications Manager Brendan Kearney said. "If they want to have a walkable Olympics, they need to make sure that the transit system can accommodate that many people hoping to get to the events." NATE HOMAN

Time capsule returns

Massachusetts officials on Wednesday prepped a 220-year-old time capsule for its return underneath the State House after the addition of modern coins and a new silver plaque. The time capsule is scheduled to be re-deposited on Thursday. Three additional stones, removed last year along with the time capsule, will be added back to the State House foundation on Thursday and Friday. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI

Triple murderer

Death-penalty trial likely to remain in Mass.

A federal judge in Boston on Wednesday indicated that the upcoming death-penalty trial for an admitted triple murderer will likely remain in Massachusetts, despite defense lawyers' arguments it will be impossible to seat an impartial jury in the state.

Gary Lee Sampson was sentenced to death in 2003 for murdering two men who picked him up while he was hitchhiking in Massachusetts and later killing a third man after he fled to New Hampshire.

His lawyers argued the intense publicity surrounding the case and the recent death-penalty trial of the marathon bomber will make it impossible to seat an unbiased jury in Massachusetts. It is unusual for two death-penalty cases to be held in the same year in the state, where capital punishment is allowed only for federal, not state, crimes. REUTERS

Uber driver is employee, not contractor: California Labor Commission

A San Francisco-based driver for smartphone-based ride-hailing service Uber is an employee, not a contractor, according to a ruling by the California Labor Commission.

The ruling was the latest in a host of legal and regulatory challenges facing Uber and other highly valued startups in the U.S. and other countries.

The commission said Uber is "involved in every aspect of the operation."

Classifying Uber drivers as employees opens the company up to considerably higher costs, including Social Security, workers' compensation and unemployment insurance. That could affect its valuation, currently above $40 billion, and the valuation of other companies that rely on large networks of individuals to provide rides, clean houses and perform other services.

Uber had argued that its drivers are independent contractors, not employees, and that it is "nothing more than a neutral technology platform."

But the commission said Uber controls the tools drivers use, monitors their approval ratings and terminates their access to the system if their ratings fall below 4.6 stars.

The ruling affects only California. The state, however, is Uber's home base and one of its largest markets, and sets a pathway frequently followed by regulators and courts in other states.

Fed says US economy still strong enough to handle rate hike

The economy is growing moderately and likely strong enough to support an interest rate increase by the end of the year, Federal Reserve Bank officials indicated.

The economy is on track to grow between 1.8 percent and 2.0 percent this year, down from the 2.3-2.7 percent range forecast in March, according to the latest policy statement and new projections issued by the central bank.

The Fed also said labor markets continued to improve, although unemployment is expected to be slightly higher at the end of the year than previously forecast in March. REUTERS

FAA, Amazon see drone use in a year

U.S. commercial drone operations could take flight on a large scale within a year, as federal regulators finalize rules for widespread operations by companies including Amazon.com, according to congressional testimony.

A Federal Aviation Administration official said the agency expects to finalize regulations over the next 12 months. This would be a substantially shorter period than previous forecasts that had anticipated rules allowing commercial operations by the end of 2016 or the beginning of 2017. REUTERS

Washington subway system has serious safety shortfalls, regulators say

Washington's troubled subway system suffers from serious safety lapses and needs to improve immediately, the Federal Transit Administration said on Wednesday.

The agency found 54 shortfalls at the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority, or Metro, with all but 10 in its subway, the second-busiest in the U.S., it said in an inspection report.

The sprawling rail-and-bus system is not unsafe but needs to emphasize implementing safety procedures that are already in place, said FTA acting Administrator Therese McMillan. REUTERS

Dan Ackerman, an editor at online technology and consumer electronics review site CNET, said he believed the future for virtual reality might finally be here for consumers. REUTERS

Billy Joel bumped for the pope at Madison Square Garden

Piano man. Billy Joel has switched his concert night.

Billy Joel is movin' out to make way for the pope!

The New York singer, who is supposed to have a monthly regular residency at Madison Square Garden, has been bumped off the stage by the pontiff for his date in September.

Joel was set to perform on Sept. 25 at MSG, but organizers announced this week he'd be switched to the next night so that Pope Francis can appear on the same day he is expected to address the United Nations.

and events have ever been rescheduled at the Garden, but organizers were willing to make an exception for the pope, who has a packed schedule while touring the U.S. for the first time since being elected to the top of the Vatican.

While the pope's schedule is yet to be officially confirmed, he is expected to arrive stateside Sept. 22. He will address Congress and deliver a mass in Washington, D.C. before stops in New York and Philadelphia.

Joel broke the news by tweeting out to his fans that the concert had been rescheduled with an accompanying photo of Pope Francis, leading fans to commend him for his "graciousness."

Man claims to have found fried rat in KFC tenders meal

If you're a big fan of Kentucky Fried Chicken, this story might make you a little squeamish.

A man in California ordered a three-piece chicken tender meal and discovered something in his box that did not taste — or look — like KFC's tender white meat.

Devorise Dixon of Watts, California, found an oddly shaped piece of deep-fried food that appears to have the shape of a rat.

According to Dixon's Facebook post, he went to KFC to speak to the manager and she apologized for everything. He plans on taking legal action.

KFC responded to the post, stating they take seriously claims made by their customers, and they are in the process of an ongoing investigation.

"KFC takes customer claims very seriously, and we are continuing to investigate this matter. Our chicken tenders often vary in size and shape, and we currently have no evidence to support this claim. We are aggressively trying to reach Mr. Dixon, and we request that he return to the restaurant with the product for testing, or call us at 1-800-Call-KFC."

Not your ordinary-looking chicken tender / DEVORISE DIXON

tos and video to his Facebook they have gone viral. If his claim is true, we're positive the "finger lickin' good" fast-food chicken giant will get hit hard with a lawsuit. LENYON WHITTAKER

ISIS car bombs injure 50 in Yemeni capital

Smoke rises from Al-Qubbatyn mosque, which belongs to the Houthi Ansarullah movement, after a car bomb attack in Sanaa, Yemen. / GETTY IMAGES

Claim. The Sunni Muslim Islamic State said in a statement posted online it carried out the attacks.

Car bombs killed or injured at least 50 people near mosques and the headquarters of Yemen's dominant Houthi group in Sanaa on Wednesday, in coordinated attacks claimed by Islamic State.

The four blasts rocked the capital as Saudi-led forces conducted more airstrikes against Houthi military bases across Yemen, and delegates attending peace talks in Switzerland reported no progress on the second day of a U.N.-sponsored push for a Ramadan truce.

A security official said at least 50 people were killed or wounded in the attacks on the Hashush mosque, the Kibsi mosque, the al-Qubah al-Khadra mosque and the political bureau of the Ansarullah movement of the Houthis, who belong to the Zaydi sect of Shiite Islam.

"The explosion was so loud, I thought it was caused by an airstrike," said a man in his 70s named Ali, who had just left a mosque when a bomb went off.

"I returned and found cars burning, people screaming and wounded people all over."

"The soldiers of the Islamic State in Yemen, in a wave of military operations as revenge for the Muslims against the Houthi apostates, [detonated] four car bombs near the centers of Houthi apostasy," an Islamic State statement claimed.

The attack is the most serious of its kind in Yemen since suicide bombers killed at least 137 worshippers and wounded hundreds during Friday prayers at two mosques in Sanaa on March 20, in attacks also claimed by Islamic State.

The Houthi-controlled state news agency quoted an official blaming Islamic State for the latest bombings. Supporters of Islamic State exchanged celebratory messages on social media.

Islamic State has recently stepped up its operations in Yemen, where al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP), also Sunni Islamist, had long dominated the militant scene.

Tiger kills man in Tbilisi after flood destroyed zoo

A tiger, one of dozens of animals that escaped after floods destroyed their zoo in the Georgian capital Tbilisi, killed a man on Wednesday, authorities said, warning that another tiger, along with a bear and a hyena were still on the loose.

Locals had been told to stay indoors after the flood allowed the animals, including wolves, lions and a hippopotamus, to roam the streets on Sunday.

Most of the animals had been rounded up by Wednesday, but workers who entered a flood-damaged warehouse close to the zoo stumbled across the white tiger, which killed one of them.

"One man was attacked by a wild animal. He is dead," Interior Minister Vakhtang Gomelauri told reporters. Police later shot and killed the tiger.

A woman called emergency services later on Wednesday to report she had seen the remaining tiger in the city center, but police were unable to find it.

Six people are still missing after the floods, which washed away buildings, roads and cars.

The Finance Ministry has estimated the damage at up to $45 million, and government officials are in touch with international donors to discuss aid.

Some experts said the flood was caused by a landslide that occurred during heavy rains that turned the city's river, the Vere, into a torrent. REUTERS

Take that, Hollywood's glass ceiling

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Sadly, this is big news. It shouldn't be, but it is. According to the Hollywood Reporter, an actress in a major studio movie will earn more than her male co-star. That actress is Jennifer Lawrence, yes, so you're probably thinking it's not so surprising. Except that her co-star is Mr. Current Box Office Champ himself, Chris Pratt. The "Hunger Games" star is set to earn $8 million more than the "Jurassic World" star in the upcoming sci-fi flick "Passengers." Which means all gender pay-gap issues have now been obliterated, and we never have to talk about it again because equality yay, right? Oh wait, you mean one instance of someone super-famous earning a lot of money doesn't solve everything? Dang. But still, good for J.Law.

Charlize Theron and Sean Penn call it quits

Well, that was fast. Charlize Theron and Sean Penn have reportedly broken up, calling off their engagement after a year and a half of dating. Theron, according to Us Weekly's sources, was apparently the one to do the dumping. Sad news, sure, but I can't say I'm all that surprised. A previously marriage-averse star comes out of a nearly decade-long relationship (to Stuart Townsend), jumps into a new one and then is engaged in practically no time? Those are not what some in the head-shrinking profession would call stable, long-term decision-making conditions. Also, Penn was super-open and effusive about the relationship (by his standards) in the press, so you just knew something was up. Still, tough break, kids.

Emma Stone has something to confess

While we debate the "are they or aren't they" factor of Emma Stone and mumble-y, bearded, British sometimes-boy-friend Andrew Garfield, there's some career-related news about Stone that's just as intriguing — and downright shocking, honestly. Stone confesses to WSJ Magazine that she passed up the chance to be in the new all-female "Ghostbusters" team led by Kristen Wiig and Melissa McCarthy. Excuse me? "The script was really funny. It just didn't feel like the right time for me. A franchise is a big commitment — it's a whole thing," she says.

"I think maybe I need a minute before I dive back into that water." Sure, but ... it's "Ghostbusters." Who wouldn't want to be a Ghostbuster?

Rethinking '80s movie pranks

As the guys from "Entourage" recently learned all too painfully, society changes in ways that make some forms of humor seem out of touch and — as College Humor points out in this video — downright rape-y. Each and every idea from films like "Revenge of the Nerds," "Porkies" and "Police Academy" turns out to be "technically a sex crime." Who knew? So how do they compare to pranks from this more modern, enlightened era? Spoiler alert: We haven't actually come all that far.

The odds-on favorite for the next Bond

Man, Daniel Craig must be getting tired of everyone always talking about when he's going to be done with playing James Bond. First there was all that Idris Elba talk and now this: A British bookie says the best odds at the moment are on "Homeland" star Damian Lewis being tapped as the next 007, according to the Telegraph. "Bets have been placed on him succeeding Daniel Craig. This is an unprecedented gamble, as for no apparent reason we have seen bets up to £200 on Damian Lewis being named as the next James Bond. This might well be significant," William Hill tells the newspaper. "Damian Lewis hadn't seen any interest in the betting until this weekend, but an absolute landslide in bets has forced us to cut the odds." Sure, but if he gets the part does that mean all the films will be about whether or not we can really trust him? Not because of his "Homeland" work, but because he's, you know, a ginger?

'GAME OF THRONES' NEEDS TO DIAL BACK THE SORROW PORN

I hated the "Game of Thrones" finale. I didn't want to, but I did. It was uneven, and it was bleak, even by the standards of the show. It felt like we spent a ton of time rehashing why the bad people were really, really bad and ignoring the story lines everyone wanted to see.

The issue with the finale for me [SPOILERS] wasn't the major death at the end. Aside from the usual "please, someone turn on the lights," my issues were the Arya murder scene and Cersei's walk — perfect examples of piling on the misery past the point of good storytelling.

Arya is my favorite character, but the scene where she murders Meryn Trant in the brothel was overkill. We know he's awful. We know he's a pedophile. We know he totally deserves what he gets. Adding in the other two little girls to be beaten was overkill.

Cersei was another issue.

On the "Game of Thrones" season capper, Lena Headey's Cersei, center, received a punishment that was lingered on for far too long. / HBO

I know actress Lena Headey has defended her, saying that she's done terrible things, but she didn't deserve that extra, ultra, mind-numbingly slow walk of shame. A walk of some sort, yes. Um, lady, you murdered King Robert and Ned Stark. You raised a monster. You were cruel to one brother and slept with the other. You've lied, gotten people arrested ... You definitely deserve something.

The way it was shot was the issue for me. I have no problem with nudity. I don't care about her body double. The scene in the book makes perfect sense. Headey did a fine job with her performance. My issue is how long they lingered on it. It was absolutely overkill. How long do we have to watch a woman be humiliated and spit on? I'm not talking about too much nudity here. I know what show I'm watching. I'm talking about the beating a dead horse to a bloody pulp.

Here's the thing: You've created a trope to break down clichés in television. No one is safe. Things are shocking. Great. However, when you overdo it, you become your own cliché. You have to have some sort of balance in a show. If it's all doom and gloom and there is never a light, you're pretty much just showing us sorrow porn.

I'm still going to watch. I'm just hoping for a better run in Season 6.

Netflix. Patience has paid off for Lea DeLaria.

Lea DeLaria's experience with the Netflix hit "Orange Is the New Black" has been a bit of an emotional roller coaster, to put it mildly. In fact, she started her relationship with the series by auditioning and not getting the gig.

"Big Boo wasn't even really a character. I auditioned for them twice, and they said, 'There isn't a part for you,'" says DeLaria, who took that news rather hard. "I mean, I literally quit show business at that point. I screamed at my manager, and I moved to my house in London, England, where I have a really good singing career. But by the time I got there, there were a thousand messages on the machine saying, 'You have to come back because they've created a role for you.' And they really did."

Before long, Big Boo was, in fact, very much a character, and the show was a breakout hit. "They just kept writing these amazing things

One more thing

For Lea DeLaria, "Orange Is the New Black" has been more than just another gig, as she feels a special connection to the tone of the series that she didn't always experience with other work. "I started as the first openly gay comic to perform on television in America, so I have always been out. My entertainment was always closely tied to my politics, so I feel like I've died and gone to lezzie feminist heaven," she says.

for her, and I was having the time of my life with this great group of people," she says. "And the next thing we know, we're picked up for Season 4, and there's a SAG Award sitting on my mantle. It's crazy."

The pinnacle of that climb, though, has come in the recently released third season, for which DeLaria was made a series regular, a distinction she hadn't previously enjoyed. "I've been doing this a long time, and this is the first time I've been a series regular," DeLaria says. "I've recurred on many,

"You're thumbing your nose at the accepted norm that we are basically spoon-fed from the moment we are raised as little girls that there's a certain way you have to look and a certain way you have to be in order to be a girl. I think this show addresses that really, really strongly. It basically says, 'It's OK to be you.'" many, many, many, many things, and it just feels so cool to have it happen — and to have it happen this late in my life is amazing."

Helio Sequence is moving fast

The band found a new way to work on their latest album.

LISA WEIDENFELD
@LisaWeidenfeld
lisa.weidenfeld@metro.us

Portland-based indie rockers Helio Sequence made life a little easier by making it a little harder for their most recent album. After the grueling writing and recording process for their 2012 album "Negotiations," they decided to shake things up. Inspired by some friends playing a game called the "20 song game," wherein participants try to compose 20 new songs in one day, they decided to set a one-month time limit for themselves to create their new album.

Songwriting sprint

"It was really liberating," says lead singer Brandon Summers. "Any creative process, you run into roadblocks, whether there's a day that you don't feel very creative, or if there's one line that you're just having a hard time getting."

But there's no time to dawdle over songs when you're on the move. "The amazing thing about working in this way was that we would have anywhere from 10 to 15 songs in different forms of being done at any given time. So if we ran into a roadblock, it'd be like, I can't get a vocal on this song, I'm going to work on bass on this one. And inevitably, out of the 10 that were on the table, something inspiring would happen."

Going eponymous

The duo decided to name their creation after the band itself, due in part to the all-encompassing nature of their output. "When we came out of it, we had 26 full songs, and after stepping back and listening to them, there's just a huge variety of stuff," explains Summers. "It just felt really defining to us, at least in the moment in terms of all the things that have influenced us in the past, and all the things that we know to be our tendency as writers. So that's why we decided to call it 'The Helio Sequence.'"

That Portland sound

The city of Portland has, in the new millennium, made quite a name for itself as a hub of indie music. Does that mean there's a specific Portland sound at this point? "The amazing thing about it is it's less a sound that comes out of the region and more a spirit, and you can hear it. There are metal bands — a band like Red Fang that have a similar spirit to something like even Helio Sequence, which is more pop kind of a sound, or something like The Thermals that are a punk band. There's still this general vibe that comes across," explains Summers. "I've thought about it myself that maybe it has something to do with the weather and how it kind of forces you in on yourself for a portion of the year and then there's a joy to this kind of coming out."

young kids, found the schedule on this project a little easier than the last one, which saw him looking after them during the day and recording at night. This time through, the kids were a little older. "Every morning, they have to go to school and be on the school bus at 7:30, so I'm at the studio by 8:30 or 9, and Benjamin's more the type of person who is almost going to bed at that time," Summers says with a laugh. "I would work the first part of the day independently, and we would meet up in the middle half of the day and work until evening, and then he would take the stuff that we'd worked on and add his synths and overdubs and ideas. The album process was almost like an 18-hour day between the two of us."

beyond the wine bottle

The Italian steakhouse is moving in on the microbrew trend with a few Italian beers.

@LUKEONEIL47

When you think about drinking in Italy, beer probably isn't the first thing that comes to mind. And why would it? With wine being such an entrenched part of the culture and an ample array of amari to choose from, it's almost unnecessary. But, much like everyone else, Italians have caught the brewing bug in recent years, a few examples of which you can try now at Davio's locations around Massachusetts.

Don't judge a book by its cover and all that, but that pig label is pretty darn cute. ALL PHOTOS DEREK KOUYOUNJIAN

Trend-spotting

"It's definitely a new segment for us. It's something we haven't attacked yet, per se," Davio's Boston General Manager John Minks says of introducing four new Italian brews to their menu. "I think craft beer in general is on the rise. It fits our niche here." While the Italian steakhouse is traditionally more wine-focused, they've branched out into smaller and local beers, but "we really haven't reached out to that higher-end beer person who's seeking something a bit more."

Research your options

That something more comes in style, flavor and price here, with most of the beers — which include one from Italy's LoverBeer, one from Birra Del Borgo and two from Birrificio Le Baladin — ranging from $15 to $22.

The four options represent a broad range of styles. The most approachable, and so far the most popular seller for them, is Baladin Nora, a lightly hoppy brew spiced with ginger and orange peel. Like the other three, it's served at cellar temperature, around 60 degrees. "We're not masking any of the flavors with your traditional 34 degrees. And serving it in a wine glass makes a statement that it's a little bit something special," he says.

The Baladin Super, coming in at a hefty 8 percent abv, pulls in the opposite direction, with a distinct floral nose, a subtle nuttiness and stone fruit, and a light rose color. Minks likens it to marzipan in flavor, adding that it's "still approachable, not like an overhopped beer that's way too bitter."

Comfort zone

Neither are out of the range of familiarity of the average beer drinker, although BeerBera is a showstopper, and I'm not sure if that's in a good or bad way. Made with Barbera grapes, the sharp cherry tartness is a bit of a shock, but it makes you want to keep going back to taste it again. "It's definitely a little different, and I always suggest people share it," Minks says. At 8 percent abv and $22, that's probably a good idea. "It's not my favorite, but people like that tartness now." It's likely best suited as an after-dinner drink, balancing out the tartness with something sweet.

You should have no such reservations about the Perle Ai Porci, however, despite its ingredients. An English-style stout, it's brewed with oyster shells that leave a hint of brine in the lightly chocolate, milky texture. "I think people get scared of this one but honestly, unless you're looking for it, you might not even know there's a salty brine to it. It's light, not like a Guinness with that big mouthfeel," he says. "It doesn't drink like that at all. If anybody likes a stout, I think they'll like this."

Need help caring for your elderly pet?

New England Pet Hospice is here to help.

LINDA CLARKE
letters@metro.us

In early 2011, Heather Merrill saw her first patients. These weren't the usual patients her career in hospice care had brought to her. These were animals attending her then newly opened New England Pet Hospice, a venture inspired by a friend's elderly dog.

"I saw she needed help and I assumed animal hospice care was out there, but it didn't exist," says Merrill, who is certified in thanatology (the study of death), and translates her knowledge into helping with dying and bereavement. "So we explored what was needed and how to do it. Our experience with animals has proven very similar to humans. Each is very individual; there are fighters and there are others who are, 'I'm done, I'm ready to leave.' Our job is to help them spend their last days in comfort and dignity," explains Merrill, who is one of the primary speakers at the American Veterinary Medical Association Convention in Boston, July 10-14.

But the New England Pet Hospice, which is based in Sudbury, isn't only for dying and terminally ill animals. It provides a wide range of services to help animal owners struggling with age issues, chronic illness or special needs. It isn't just end of life care, but quality of life care, and for all types of animals. "The vast majority are cats and dogs, but we do have one tortoise," says Merrill, who has three dogs and two cats in her own home. "Many of our staff are very experienced with horses, too."

Every family is different; each pet is different

"How we feel about life is generally how we feel about death," Merrill says. "Someone who is loving in life is loving in death; someone who is angry in life is angry in death, and we see that in animals, too. It's very important to get to know the animal as an individual. Then you have an understanding of what they are going to want and need. There is no one answer for every family."

It's OK to cry

"We don't attempt to not be emotional. It's OK to feel sad when a patient dies. We hug a lot. We don't have to be so sad when there's a good death and it's been comfortable and honors the animal. It is then extremely rewarding. Death isn't the enemy."

When to start thinking about hospice care

"The sooner the better," Merrill says of when to seek advice. "They don't need to be dying for us to help. It can start with home care and visiting ill, elderly or special needs dogs. Ours is an interdisciplinary approach and we can help the family care for the animal. This can help prevent what many feel is their only option, and an animal can be spared being euthanized. With support, visitation and nursing care, it is possible for people who are overwhelmed with caring for a sick animal to enjoy time with their pet again."

Beach paradise on Haiti

Labadee

Several cruise lines have private Caribbean islands, and Royal Caribbean's is Labadee, a day resort on a peninsula in the northern part of Haiti.

It may not be an island, per se, but it is a massive playground for cruisers. Located on a whopping 260 acres, the beach is part amusement park, part resort (though the hotel rooms are actually on the cruise ship).

When your ship is in port here, you can spend the whole day lazing in the sun and enjoying the white sand, palm trees and pale blue water without booking a shore excursion.

There are a variety of bars to choose from, with everything from buckets of beers to frozen cocktails, and the restaurants serve casual American barbecue that feels fitting for the beach-holiday setting. Think picnic tables and a buffet of burgers, ribs, hot dogs and corn on the cob. After lunch, you can stroll through the marketplace, where you'll find Haitian crafts for sale and local bands performing.

There are rows and rows of lounge chairs waiting and, if you're one of the first people off the ship when you arrive, it may feel like there's no way this place could ever fill up. There's also a water park with trampolines and water slides sitting right in the surf, as well as a splash park on the land for little kids, with buckets that dump water on the children and toys fitted with hoses and sprays. For a fee, you can also take a ride on the zip line, which stretches out over the water, or even the roller coaster, both of which are fun activities for teens, tweens and grown-ups.

If you want a little more adventure, there are plenty of options — from snorkeling and kayaking to parasailing and boat rides to quieter beaches further afield. INSIGHT GUIDES | SHERRI EISENBERG

How to upgrade your Labadee experience

- The easiest way to have a more enjoyable experience is to book a cabana. The palapa-topped cabanas (which cost approximately $200 for the day) fill up fast — in most cases, before you get off the ship, and in some before the cruise even sets sail.
- Having an open-air bungalow of your own helps give you some private space and a guaranteed stretch of shade, as well as waiter service. Your butler will bring cold water and lunch, and the cabanas come with towels and floats to use in the surf.
- The locations vary: Some are on rocks sitting over the surf, and others are on the beach behind rows of lounge chairs.

Pittsburgh on a budget

Enjoying this underrated city with a ton to do doesn't require a big budget. Here's an inexpensive way to experience the friendly and accessible city of Pittsburgh.

Consistently voted one of the most livable cities, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, owes a lot of its reputation to its vibrant Cultural District. The 14-square-block area in the heart of downtown thrives with creative energy.

Nearly 2 million visitors a year browse the galleries and boutiques. The district has nine theaters and more than 50 restaurants. Market Square has free events, from Sunday morning yoga to the regular Tuesday afternoon kids' play. There's also live jazz in Katz Plaza on Tuesdays from 5 to 7 p.m. On Friday nights, the Andy Warhol Museum has half-price admission. Check availability for half-price tickets for shows in the Cultural District (and elsewhere) at www.livingpittsburgh.com.

Adjacent to downtown is the Strip District (www.neighborsinthestrip.com). Not at all salacious, its name comes from its location between the Allegheny River on one side and steep hills on the other. Originally the warehouse district, it has evolved into a thriving, lively neighborhood with strong ethnic flavors. It's foodie heaven, with ethnic food stores and stalls, meat markets, fishmongers, bakeries, coffee shops and eateries lining its historic streets.

Walk off the calories at the Heinz History Center and Western Pennsylvania Sports Museum, dedicated to all things Pittsburgh, with six floors of exhibits. The Society for Contemporary Craft on Smallman Street presents free exhibits of cutting-edge works by diverse and new talent.

Another great neighborhood is

East Liberty, along Penn Avenue. It's an eclectic residential, arts and commercial district. You'll find a more experimental vibe here, with studios and theaters next door to an urban forestry center and a Southeast Asian cooking school. The Pittsburgh Glass Center is part gallery, part studio. It offers short workshops if you want to try the medium. Admission is free, although a $5 donation is polite. The Penn Avenue First Friday arts night is a community street party that runs until the wee hours with free events and discounted food and drink (www.pennavenue.org).

The Carnegie Science Center is worth the price (adults $19, children $12, over 65 pay just $5 on Tuesdays with 20 percent off at the cafe). As entertaining for adults as it is for kids, there are four floors of unusual hands-on exhibits about water, space and robotics. The separate Highmark SportsWorks explores physics, physiology and performance through virtual games and competitions. On Friday and Saturday nights, try SkyWatch (separate fee, $2). The observatory's telescope gets close to Jupiter's clouds and Saturn's rings.

For more information on budget accommodation, admission packages and more ideas for things to do, visit www.visitpittsburgh.com.

Letters to the editor

Everyone needs to urge their senators to vote for Equal Pay bill for the benefit of women workers

Women are being underpaid and no one's talking about it. In fact, we're legally at risk of losing our jobs if we discuss our salaries with our co-workers.

The Equal Pay Bill (S.983) seeks to protect employees' free speech in regard to their salaries, require employers to list the minimum salary in job postings and pay employees according to their skills and responsibilities regardless of gender.

We have only until July 21st to urge our senators to support this bill, and I'm disappointed Metro hasn't covered this recently.

This is a conversation we can't afford to keep quiet.

Sodium information on food labels hasn't stopped people from eating it

Re: 'Awareness is no bad thing for salt intake' (Metro, June 17) I agree with letter writer Tabatha Lopez's utterly brilliant suggestion that we should have labels on prepared foods that indicate their salt content due to all the social evils this might help to allay.

Oh, wait. We do. It's called "sodium." It's presented on food labels in both milligrams and percent of daily recommended intake, and such labeling was imposed by the FDA about 20 years ago ... yet we're still getting collectively fatter.

DON'T BE AFRAID TO PICK FROM THE FARM

You missed out on Carlos Correa, Byron Buxton and Joey Gallo. Don't go home and kick your dog — it's not the puppy's fault. Plus, there are more prospects coming anyway.

While it's true the real five-star guys have already been called up, we can still find some diamonds on the farm. These minor leaguers have a good chance to be called up soon and make a big enough impact to be relevant in mixed leagues.

Meet the Matz

The Triple-A's Pacific Coast League is known for wildly inflated hitting stats thanks to the ballparks. So Steven Matz's 2.30 ERA, 1.15 WHIP and 81-30 strikeout-walk ratio over 78 1/3 innings are even more impressive than they sound. The contending Mets would do very well to get Matz in their rotation, especially after dumping Dillon Gee and watching Jon Niese struggle. It's already been speculated the promotion will happen around July 1.

Seager bomb

The deeper Jimmy Rollins sinks into the grave, the more urgency there is in adding Corey Seager. Rollins is currently sporting a brutal sub-.600 OPS and .261 OBP — numbers that aren't likely

Just say no

The July 31 trade deadline is fast approaching, with Cole Hamels as the hottest commodity. Once he goes, the Phillies should fill the hole in their rotation with Aaron Nola. It would be a bit unconventional for a player selected in the first round a year ago to start the season in Single-A and end it in the majors, but this is an unconventional season for the last-place Phillies. Nola has been nothing short of dominant on the farm, going 7-3 with a 1.88 ERA in 12 Double-A starts before Sunday's promotion to Triple-A.

Sox praying that Holt's cycle day is start of something

The Red Sox were in desperate need of something to smile about during a seven-game losing streak. Brock Holt provided the sunny-side-up grins Tuesday when he became the first Sox player since John Valentin in 1996 to hit for the cycle.

Apparently one great game is enough for any Boston player to get something close to a full-time gig these days as Holt will see increased playing time.

"Brock's going to get regular at-bats, if not everyday at-bats," Red Sox manager John Farrell told WEEI Wednesday. "And particularly in the American League with our DH slot, he gives us such flexibility to rest guys and under the current alignment with David [Ortiz] being our everyday DH, it really allows us to spell other guys more frequently."

The versatile Holt is expected to play a ton of right field in the coming weeks.

It remains to be seen if Holt's big day will spark the Red Sox. They wrap up their home-and-home series with the Braves in Atlanta Thursday (7 p.m., NESN) as Clay Buchholz (3-6, 4.22 ERA) squares off against Shelby Miller (5-2, 2.02 ERA).

Buchholz has been relatively consistent in recent weeks. He allowed four runs against both the Blue Jays and A's and, to start the month of June, went eight innings in a blanking of the Twins. In fact, Buchholz has not allowed five runs or more since taking a loss against the Rays back on May 4 at Fenway.

The Sox face the AL Central-leading Royals in Kansas City for three games beginning Friday night. MATT BURKE

Brady with momentum

Momentum seems to be shifting toward Tom Brady in the Deflategate saga, at least this week. A scientific analysis by the American Enterprise Institute shredded the Wells Report, rejecting the idea that the footballs used by the Pats in the AFC title game had a significant drop in air pressure compared to the footballs used by Indianapolis. "[The Wells Report] was really clumsy," The AEI report's co-author, Stan Veuger, told the Washington Post. AEI's finding may play a role in Roger Goodell's ruling in Brady's appeal as it helped shape the fallout of the 2012 Bountygate saga involving the New Orleans Saints. Brady's appeal will be heard next Tuesday.

Course the star as US Open tees off

U.S. Open. Jordan Spieth and Rory McIlroy are among favorites in this weekend's contest at Chambers Bay.

Prior to a U.S. Open, the discussion almost always centers around which of golf's superstars will play well enough to win golf's most coveted title.

But in this year's contest, even more than usual, the golf course could be the star attraction — regardless of whether Phil Mickelson completes the career grand slam or if Tiger Woods wins his fourth title.

Chambers Bay, located along the Puget Sound in Washington, could just as well be located on the west coast of England. The links-style course redefines undulation and offers golfers a true test — a test many of the game's top pros are unhappy about.

"I think it's just that it can be a tiring week," Henrik Stenson said, "because you can hit some really nice golf shots and end up far, far away from the hole due to the design of the green complexes."

Stenson is still gunning for his first major title, but the reigning Masters champ, phenom Jordan Spieth (who has the second-best Vegas odds at 7-1), welcomes the challenge of a ridiculous 7,585 yards.

"If you are going to talk negative about a place," he said, "you're almost throwing yourself out to begin with, because golf is a mental game."

Favored just a little above Spieth is Rory McIlroy (5-1 odds), who certainly boasts a game that could tame Chambers Bay. And if Phil Mickelson can put together four solid rounds, he could add the only missing trophy from his hall of fame career.

Woods still has hope that he can play at a competitive level again.

"I've got three of these," Woods said with a smile.
